PLUCK OF INDIAN BANDIT.

The Renowned Raisuli Once Proved His Utter Indifference to Danger.

"At Tangier," said a Chicagoan, according to an exchange. "I once saw Raisuli. He looked as magnificent as an Indian Rajah, and a Frenchman told me that he had a foolhardy and reckless valor."

"This Frenchman said that Raisuli had entered the shooting gallery of Tangier one day while a Tunisian was trying a little pistol practice."

"The Tunisian was an excellent shot. He broke glass balls, rang bells, split pipe stems, and penetrated bull's eyes without a blunder. At each shot a polite murmur of applause arose. The man was all puffed up with triumph."

"Raisuli looked on with a sneer, and finally he said in a loud voice:

"In a duel this gentleman wouldn't shoot so well."

"We'll see about that," yelled the Tunisian, and he challenged Raisuli, and ten minutes later they were on the field.

"They were to fight at 12 paces, each to fire one shot. Lots were drawn as to who should shoot first and Raisuli lost. He took his stand before the Tunisian calmly, and the latter lifted up his weapon, took careful aim and missed."

"Raisuli smiled. 'What did I tell you?' he said."

"And he thrust his pistol in his belt and strode away humming a French song."

Solid Comfort

The independent standards which are a part of the chair do it all.
